The creek begins its course in the eastern Sierra Nevada named as Mammoth Creek. Its mouth is at the confluence with the Owens River upstream from Crowley Lake. The springs near Hot Creek host one of the two known Tui chub populations of the endangered Owens tui chub species. The Long Valley Observatory of the United States Geological Survey USGS , a volcano observatory , monitors spring activity, water temperatures and chemistry, and stream flow, as well as the caldera volcanic activity. In hydrothermal systems, the circulation of ground water is driven by a combination of topography and geothermal heat sources. The system in the Long Valley Caldera is recharged primarily from snowmelt in the highlands around the western and southern rims of the caldera. The heated water, kept from boiling by high pressure, still has lower density than cold water, and it rises along steeply inclined fractures to depths of 0. It then flows eastward through rock layers to hydrothermal vent discharge points at the surface along Hot Creek and around Crowley Lake. The springs in Hot Creek all emerge along a stream section between two faults and discharge a total of about 8, This water flow represents nearly 70 percent of the total heat discharged by all thermal springs in Long Valley Caldera. The thermal springs farther east all discharge less water and at lower temperatures. The larger and more vigorous springs discharge from fractures in the volcanic rock in the gorge. Rock fracturing happens because the thermal area lies within a region of frequent earthquakes and active uplift of the ground. When fractures become sealed by mineral deposition, spring discharge and temperature decline. When new fractures develop or sealed fractures reopen, spring discharge and temperatures can increase suddenly. Inyo National Forest as a geologic interpretive site and recreation area. It is popular for fishing , swimming , hiking , bird watching , and photography activities. Hot Creek in the Hot Creek Gorge section can harbor dangers as the locations, discharge rates, and temperatures of springs often change. The changes can be sudden and dangerous to unprepared visitors especially if entering beyond walkways and fences. At times this geysering activity is vigorous enough to produce "popping" sounds audible from hundreds of feet away. The geysering usually lasts a few seconds and occurs at irregular intervals, with several minutes between eruptions. Fumaroles , or steam vents, are also located in the gorge. They can occur in the ground beyond the creek bed. The unpredictability of this hazardous spring activity led the U. Forest Service to close parts of the Hot Creek Gorge in June , [6] and the closure has remained in effect as of February From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia.
