Spiral cable clock spring

So it is best and highly recommended to have an auto electrician install a clock spring. However, if you are savvy with car maintenance and have the tools, then you may make the decision to install yourself. That is entirely up to you. Difficulty level may be described as Easy to Moderate. Below is a generic and rough clock spring fitting procedure used by the author to install a replacement clock spring , sometimes called a spiral cable. It is not comprehensive and further steps may be necessary depending on vehicle and installation. Tools Required:. Make sure the negative is disconnected from the battery. Then wait for minute or so until all the reserve current is drained from the electrical system. Remove the screws and bolts that fasten the the steering wheel cover and remove the cover. Locate the airbag and remove the side mounting bolts and the wiring of the airbag, then remove the airbag from the wheel. Use socket-driver to remove the steering wheel retaining nut. Locate the steering wheel dampener, Generally this is a rectangular component in the center of the steering wheel. Remove the dampener from the assembly and remove the steering wheel. Remove the old vehicle clock spring spiral cable and replace in exact same position the new airbag clock spring. Bolt the steering wheel back on by replacing the wheel nut. Re-position the airbag and its wiring and the steering wheel dampener. Replace the bolts and or screws from the wheel covering. Reconnect the negative battery terminal cable. Social Share this page. We stock a range of aftermarket spiral cables or Clock Springs suited to most of the popular models sold in Australia. In a vehicle steering system Clock Spring Spiral Cables are a round shaped connector. Clock Springs have a ribbon cable often called a spiral cable inside a circular unit. The coiled ribbon cable does not function as a spring in any way. The unit housing the cable has 2 parts that can rotate within itself. This allows the long ribbon cable to wind and unwind itself as the wheel is turned back and forth. Thus the electrical connection is kept through the cable regardless of steering wheel position and wheel movement. This is usually around 5 turns. The length of the wound cable inside is limited to allow just that many turns. As such, failure to correctly centre a clock spring at installation may leave too little cable length wound up. So when the wheel is moved to lock on one side the cable will reach its end and be snapped inside the unit, creating complete circuit failure. A Horn Spiral Cable Clock Spring is a wire wound in a spiral shape around a spool like an analogue clock spring hence the name. The clock spring allows the steering wheel to turn while letting the horn, airbag, radio controls, call control and cruise control on newer cars to continue working. The clock spring is located between the steering wheel and steering column connected by multiple small groups of wires. It is highly advised to get the clock spring fixed as soon as possible as it controls two important safety features Drivers Airbag and Horn. It is potentially very dangerous to drive your vehicle in this condition and should be avoided if at all possible. NOTE : The shown image is for depiction purpose only.
